

“Any tradition depends for its survival on retaining shared beliefs and practices for identifying common ends and for making and recognizing progress towards achieving those ends. . . . Thomism is recognizably a tradition which is in its own terms flourishing.”

—Alasdair MacIntyre (1991)

Themes in the Philosophy of Alasdair MacIntyre and Thomas Aquinas

An intensive summer seminar for graduate students in philosophy, directed by John Haldane

Faculty

John Haldane (St Andrews)
Sarah Broadie (St Andrews)
David Solomon (Notre Dame)
Candace Vogler (Chicago)

August 4–10, 2013
Princeton, New Jersey

The Seminar is open to graduate students in philosophy and in other disciplines who have significant philosophical training.

Application Deadline • April 1, 2013

More information on the Seminar, including application procedures, is available online at www.winst.org/thomisticseminar.html

Questions may be emailed to John Doherty at jdohertry@winst.org

Sponsored by The Witherspoon Institute
www.winst.org