Essay-writing workshop

Christopher Cowley, a philosopher from University College Dublin, will be offering a 90-minute workshop on philosophy essay-writing techniques. The English-language countries have developed a certain approach to writing philosophical essays, one that stresses the importance of clear definitions, of slowly building an argument, of applying the argument to examples, and of anticipating objections. It's certainly not the only way of doing philosophy, but it is a way that appeals to some people. The workshop will discuss these basic principles, and will work through some examples from different areas of philosophy. The workshop will be conducted in English, but students are welcome to ask questions in Czech.

Pondělí 14.4. v 15:50, místnost 225V (ÚFaR FF UK)